

Introducing and Announcing
Tom Sheley
New EIC Contributing Expert
September 28, 2013

EIC is proud to announce its latest Contributing Expert, Thomas Sheley. Tom combines over 3 decades of experience in nuclear power operations going back to 1963 when he served our country in the Navy Nuclear Power School and then the nuclear submarine fleet. Tom also worked many years as a commercial nuclear power plant control room operator and Senior Reactor Operator.

A resident of Wisconsin, Tom is retired now and speaks publicly on topics related to nuclear energy.

The Energy Information Center continues to perform its mission as an independent organization that serves as a clearinghouse for public discussion on facts related to energy topics including opinions by experts in the energy field. EIC focuses on facts that are commonly unknown or under-reported. EIC's experts volunteer time and experience to dispel myths that are based upon inaccurate technical information or based upon activist messaging that is biased. This mission is important to America's public dialogue necessary to ensure a safe, reliable supply of energy for our country.

Increasingly, there is a need for credible experts in the field of nuclear power operations to provide factually accurate input and expertise necessary for thoughtful public debate. Tom will be a great asset to the public dialogue.

Welcome aboard, Tom. Thank you for your contribution and service.
